"The Iron Trade Review" says:

The fron Trade Review says:

Finished raw material markets throughout the country are quiet, so far as new business is concerned, and in some places there is a tendency to lower prices. In the East and in the Chicago district little attention is paid to Plitsburgh as a basing point. Most favorable feature of the market is continuation of liberal specifications on contracts made some time ago at low prices. There is considerable doubt as to what will be the attitude of buyers when the present contracts expire. In spite of low prices recently quoted on boiler tubes by leading producers, some of the smaller mills have been able to do a fair business without making similar concessions.
